There are very few books in English poetry more than this, and the present copy is unique from the fact of its being the copy of King James II. of the poems is entitled 'Upon the saying that my Verses were made by another,' and concludes as ws:--* 13181

'Orinda (Albion's and her sexes grace)
Ow'd not her glory to a beauteous face,
It was her radiant soul that shon with-in,
Which struk a lustre through her outward skin,
That did her lips and cheeks with roses dy,
Advance't her height, and sparkled in her eye.
Nor did her sex at all obstruct her fame,
But higher 'mong the stars it fixt her name;
What she did write, not only all allow'd,
But ev'ry laurel, to her laurel, bow'd!

Th' envious age, only to me alone,
Will not allow, what I do write, my own,
But let 'em rage, and 'gainst a maide conspire,
So deathless numbers from my tuneful lyre
Do ever flow; so Phebus, I by thee
Divinely inspired and possest may be;
I willingly accept Cassandras fate
To speak the truth, although believ'd too late.'

As to the object of this Tract, the author, in his preface, expresses himself as follows:—'What has determined me to publish it is a sermon by Watson, Bishop of Landaff, entitled, "The wisdom and goodness of God, in having made both rich and poor; with an appendix, containing reflections on the present state of England and France." The error in the title of this sermon determined me. It is wrong to say that God made rich and poor, he made only male and female; and he gave them the earth for their inheritance. Instead of preaching to encourage one part of mankind in insolence, it would be better that priests employed their time to render the general condition of man less miserable than it is. Practical religion consists in doing good; and the only way of serving God is that of endeavouring to make his creation happy. All preaching that has not this for its object, is nonsense and hypocrisy.'* 17406

As to the object of this Tract, the author, in his preface, expresses himself as follows:—'What has determined me to publish it is a sermon by Watson, Bishop of Landaff, entitled, "The wisdom and goodness of God, in having made both rich and poor, with an appendix, containing reflections on the present state of England and France." The error in the title of this sermon determined me. It is wrong to say that God made rich and poor, he made only male and female; and he gave them the earth for their inheritance. Instead of preaching to encourage one part of mankind in insolence, it would be better that priests employed their time to render the general condition of man less miserable than it is. Practical religion consists in doing good; and the only way of serving God is that of endeavouring to make his creation happy. All preaching that has not this for its object, is nonsense and hypocrisy.'* 17406
